Meeting the challenges of Agriculture and Forestry with Commissioner Bob Odom

Louisiana forestry officials will mark the celebration of Arbor Day, January 18, this year by planting a native Jim Bowie live oak in the new Millennium Grove at Alexander State Forest in Woodworth.

The sapling was grown from an acorn dropped by the 300-year-old Jim Bowie Live Oak growing in Opelousas next to the boyhood home of the Battle of Alamo hero and namesake of the famous hunting knife. The tree is one of five selected by the Department of Agriculture and Forestry to be planted in the Millennium Grove.

"Our foresters selected trees that were significant in southern history and would grow well in the Louisiana climate and soil," Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Bob Odom says. "With all that is going on in the world today, it's important for Americans to stop and celebrate American history and their heritage on commemorative occasions like Arbor Day."

Other trees in the Millennium Grove include an Alvin York tulip poplar grown from a seed from the Sergeant Alvin York Tulip Poplar at the Pall Mall, Tenn., former home of the famous World War I sergeant; a Helen Keller southern magnolia grown from a seed of the Helen Keller Southern Magnolia on the grounds of her home in Tuscumbie, AL; a Sam Houston kissing bur oak grown from an acorn from the tree in San Marcos, Texas, where Houston kissed local women who presented him with a flag during his 1857 campaign for governor; and a treaty live oak grown from an acorn from the Treaty Oak in Jacksonville, Fla., where, according to legend, many treaties with Native Americans were signed.

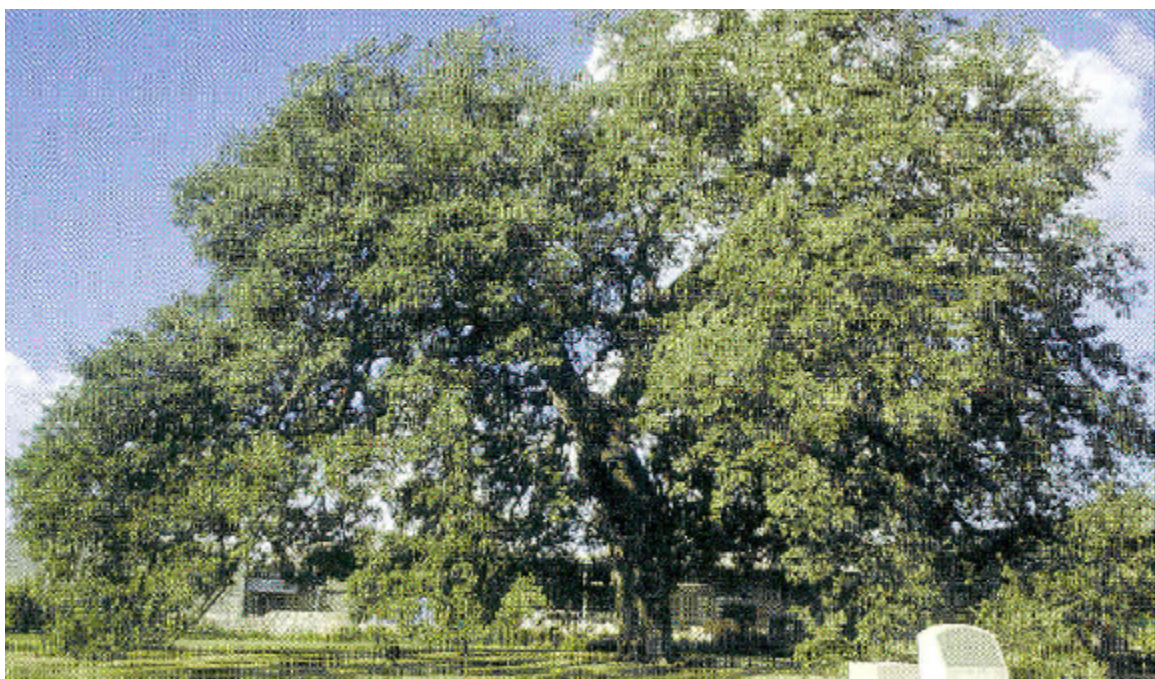

"Each of these trees has a story behind it, and it is our hope that the Millennium Grove will help keep the stories alive for future generations," Odom says.

Odom explains that the Millennium Grove project originated in the fall of 2000 under the direction of then-U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman. The project provided 100 trees from the American Forests' Historic Tree Nursery to each state.

In Louisiana, Odom's department gave five trees to each of the 19 communities who had Tree City USA status at the time and kept five trees for the Millennium Grove at Alexander State Forest.

"The forest industry provides about $5 billion to the state's economy each year, so planting and growing trees is a way of life for many people in Louisiana. What a difference it would make in the beauty of our state and the health of our environment if every community and school in Louisiana would take a minute and plant a tree on Arbor Day this year," Odom notes.

The Arbor Day celebration at Alexander State Forest will begin at 11 a.m. January 18. Odom and State Forester Paul Frey will plant the Millennium Grove along with officials representing the Louisiana Forestry Association and the Louisiana Urban Forestry Council.

A sapling grown from an acorn of the Treaty Oak in Jacksonville, Fla., is one of five historic trees that will be planted in the Millennium Grove at Alexander State Forest in Woodworth on Arbor Day.

Leave wood outside to prevent bugs in the house

It's getting cooler outside, and fireplaces will soon be blazing inside – if you haven't already been building fires.

So LSU AgCenter entomologist Dr. Dale Pollet says now is the time to keep in mind your home could be invaded by insects that have set up house for the winter in your stack of firewood. "Firewood stacked outside provides an excellent hiding place for insects," Pollet says, adding, "Insects use the wood for a host site. And once the wood is brought inside, the insects come inside with it."

Some insects use the cracks and crevices in wood as quiet resting places to sleep away the winter, Pollet said. Some moths and butterflies use the wood to hide their chrysalis and cocoons as the catterpillars change into butterflies and moths that will emerge next spring.

"What happens in most cases is these insects are so close to emerging as adults – or are adults waiting for the warmth of spring," he said. "The nice, cozy atmosphere of the house next to the fireplace causes them to emerge and seek a way out of the house. This is why they are attracted to the lights or windows."

Most of the insects that come into houses on firewood are not harmful to the occupants or the house, although stinging insects such as wasps, hornets and yellow jackets sometimes can be in the wood, Pollet said.

"These insects will sting," he said. "People want to be sure to look for these insects before they bring the wood inside."

Other insects that can come in with firewood include beetles and termites, Pollet said. In most cases, there's no need to worry about damage to the house unless termites are brought inside and the firewood stays for several weeks or months. So one way to make sure this doesn't happen is to bring in smaller quantities of firewood that will be used quickly, he said. "If people will bring in just the amount of firewood they will burn in an evening and leave the rest outdoors in the cold, crisp air, the insects will remain asleep and no one will be the wiser about the giant flying roach that was really a beetle or a moth or a butterfly that eats only nectar and not clothes or furniture," Pollet said.

Louisiana Cotton Forum slated for January 22

The 2002 Louisiana Cotton Forum will focus on the latest information about several different areas of cotton production when it is held Jan. 22 at the Holiday Inn Holiday in Monroe.

This year's program begins with registration at 8 a.m. and will address a variety of topics related to cotton farming - including production costs and production economics. "We've tried to include information in this forum that will be important to producers in the coming year," said Dr. John Barnett, former LSU AgCenter cotton specialist, who now serves as AgCenter regional director for Central Louisiana. "We believe everyone who attends will benefit greatly from what they learn during the day."

Among the speakers:

-Dr. Bill Richardson, chancellor of the LSU AgCenter, will open the morning session at 8:40 a.m.

-Dr. Don Boquet of the LSU AgCenter's Northeast Research Station will speak about cotton fiber quality and yield.

-Willie Cooper, state director of the Farm Services Agency, will give an update on the agency's work.

-Dale Givens, secretary of the Louisiana Department of Environmental Quality, will give an update on environmental regulations known as TMDLs, or Total Maximum Daily Loads.

The afternoon portion of the Cotton Forum begins at 1:15 p.m. with breakout sessions on cotton production economics, whole farm management, entomology, weeds, disease and nematodes. Other sessions include discussions on production practices, harvest aids, yield drag in stacked gene cotton, cotton fertility, deficiency symptoms and precision agriculture.
